"Effective coaching sessions are led by the client (coachee) and to a lesser degree the coach. The coach spends more time listening, guiding, questioning to elicit solutions from the coachee, and using various tools to maximise coachee self-discovery, action, learning, and forward movement. The client and NOT the coach do the best work. Client's self-directed solutions lead to motivated goals. Its success in self-motivated goals that lead to sustained self-motivation" (Source: Angus McLeod, Phd Philadelphia, 2003, Performance Coaching, Crown House Publishing Ltd).

Our top class coaching focuses on what the client wants, which resultants in awareness, interest, desire, action and learning, and transformation from their current state to future desired state, with personal mastery being a major outcome.

What do we focus on and what is our coaching process? People and organisations use coaches for many individual reasons. Typically people and companies / organisations (hence forth, people will refer to people and companies / organisations) use coaches because they want to change something in their life / company / organisation, have specific goals they want to achieve, have a problem that needs resolving (E.g. work or personal relationships), and want to transform from their / the companies / organisations current state to a future desired state.

Part of our coaching methodology is to begin with the coachee or a collective group/team (group/team is seen as one entity). A comprehensive Information Gathering process achieved through a number of coaching sessions uncovers a deep understanding of the coachee/group. This understanding will amongst other things, include why the person/group is who/what they are today as well as where they wish to be/go in the future. This assists in paving the way forward to reach the outputs clients want to achieve. Our clients will experience a great deal of self-discovery through them taking accountability and action which leads to substantial learning and life altering change.

Once our client has been coached through a comprehensive information gathering process which includes a substantial amount of personal discovery, they will narrow down what they want to achieve in their lives / career / business. This is obtained by the client prioritising their goals and actions.

Through skilful coaching, the client explores various options to achieve their goal/solve the problems/reach the desired state and then formulates the interventions (the how to achieve their goals/solving the problems/reaching their desired future state). Through ongoing coaching, clients are subtly encouraged to evaluate their progress and their interventions during their journey. The purpose behind ongoing evaluation is for the client to re-evaluate and change/improve their interventions on an ongoing basis.

Our coaching process is fluid and adjusts to where the client is as well as where the client wants/needs to be. The Coach “performs a skilful dance” facilitating the clients free movement between our coaching phases, always ensuring there is forward movement and progress towards change brought about through action and learning. Coaching sessions are characterised by specific outcomes being set by the client with the measure of success of the coaching sessions being the attainment of those outcomes.
